An alternate explanation as to why dogs have cold, wet noses may have to do with survival skills, and predate domestication of our furry friends. It's suggested by some scientists that extra moisture on the nose may increase a dog's olfactory capacity: in other words, the dog's sense of smell. While the modern pampered pooch may not need to have a particularly good sense of smell, this aspect of the dog is still relied upon. Working dogs especially, need great smelling ...
